Not a bad idea, but it might decrease your revenue for the year! They're obviously obviously stuck in WOD, the World of DOS! It always amazes me to see how many companies still exist on DOS based software! Of course, in some ways they're right; if you have a DOS based app that you've been using for years, and it still works, why change it? The biggest problem old DOS based software is running into is that parallel port printers are getting harder and harder to find and DOS programs all send output to LPT-1, not USB ports.
