

Re: XP and SP2

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/BackOffice/microsoft.public.backoffice.smallbiz2000/2004-11/0319.html>

---

From: Steve Flynn (steve[nospam])

Date: 11/08/04

Date: Mon, 8 Nov 2004 10:59:29 -0000

Try this:

Under the the advanced settings tab in Windows Firewall configuration you can adjust settings for ICMP traffic. Make sure that "Allow incoming echo request" is selected. This will allow the workstation to respond to pings with the firewall turned on.

You may need to use group policy to adjust this setting.

Regards

Steve Flynn

"ntwrk admn" <ntwrkadm@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:AF107DB4-E685-4816-85DD-1A1BE3CF3C84@microsoft.com...
> After installing SP2 on workstations running XP or new computers running > that come with SP2 already installed, here's the problem. I can ping the > server from the workstation but I can't ping the workstation from the > server.
> XP
> Any ideas? I had a similar problem where I couldn't install Norton > Anti-virus
> from the server to the workstation, it wouldn't connect to the workstation > and gave me the following error, "cannot access admin$, contact system > administrator". Turned out I turned off the firewall settings in the local > area connection settings on the workstation and it worked. I turned off > the > same settings in this case thinking it may help and still can't ping the > workstation.