

RE: wish to not receive a response

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/BizTalk/microsoft.public.biztalk.general/2004-09/0358.html>

From: fzee (fzee_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 09/09/04

Date: Thu, 9 Sep 2004 07:51:03 -0700

I also know the SPROCs are working because testing them in Query Analyzer, information is getting writing into the dB.

"fzee" wrote:

> Thanks for the responses.

>

> I did use the Add Generated Items – Adapters...and selected the correct

> SPROC. A SQLService.xsd was created for me.

>

> Their is no SPROC, element or value named spTest. When I ran the Wizard > that generated the SQLService.xsd file, I specified the request to be spSend > and the response to be spTest. So that's why I think it has something to do > with the response.

>

> I am mapping my schema to the SQLService.xsd schema.

>

> Thanks

>

> "Neal Walters" wrote:

>

>> I was getting the same message last week. I think I was sending the wrong

>> XML to SQL, and it was taking one of the element names in my bad XML and >> assuming it was the stored procedure name.

>>

>> In your case he thinks the stored procedure is 'spTest'. Is that one of >> your element names or values? Did you use the "Add Generated Items" and use >> the SQL wizard to build the proper schema fo your call to Stored-Procedure?

>> Did you map your XML to this schema?

>>

>> Neal Walters

>> <http://Biztalk-Training.com> – Free Video Tutorials

>>