Hi all,

I did my MCSE on NT4 way back in year 2000, then recently I passed exam 070-282 Small Biz Server. I am just considering MCSE 2003 now. Is it worth doing NOW? I mean is there anything on its way that will make this mcse 2003 expired in a year or two? I dnt want to waste plenty of time in preparation and nearly £1000 in exam fees and then find out few months later something new has come....I hope u all know what I mean....plz guide thanks

I bloody hope so (worth doing, that is).

Just started mine also. Well I have planned to go as far as an MCSA before deciding where to go from there. Thinking of a security track but undecided on the best route for this.

Got as far as 070-270 so far, which is a doddle.

Just booked in for the 070-290 which I was hoping to take in 2-weeks but the earliest appointment I could get was for January 4th.

I just hope the holiday period celebrations (p*ss ups) do not pickle my brain so much that I forget to even attend.

You are a little out on your estimation of the cost to take the exams.

If you acquire some exam vouchers for 15% (or more) off, the cost for the seven exams is going to be approx £600, or less (including vat).

If you read some earlier posts you will see that my knowledge of theoretical math is extremely good (but don't quote me on that).

I say, go for it :)
