LarryWestMCSD piffled away vaguely:

<snip>

I got an 800 on the mathematics portion of the SAT exam and won the 1972 District Mathematics contest at Homestead High School in Sunnyvale, California [do a google search if you want to know the importance of that date and school – although if you have spent any time in the computer industry, you should already know]. I also received an 800 on the quantitative portion of the GRE exam, and a 790 on the analytical section, and these were before they were recentered downward

I hate math. Lasher's ok, he's just tired and misinterpreted your post. No need to reply with your entire life-story and credentials.

BTW: When posting, please put signature at bottom of post. Most newsreaders interpret the double dash as a sig and cut off everything below it when someone goes to reply. That means if I want to quote something, I have to copy and paste and put in the ">" symbols to show I'm quoting and I usually don't wanna work that hard. It also makes your reply posts really hard to read.
