Matt Pardo piffled away vaguely:

How would that be illogical?

The CISSP is an real elite certification, properly protected. The MCSE and Security+ are not. They are not remotely in the same league and they don't use the same system. A CISSP does not need an MCSE. It's like graduating from college and then going to kindergarten.

So basically, if you're planning on teaching at Kindergarten, you need to get your CISSP first, then get your MCSE?
