

Re: How do I query a dataset?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.framework.adonet/2004-03/0266.html>

From: Miha Markic [MVP C#] (miha)

Date: 03/03/04

Date: Wed, 3 Mar 2004 10:35:22 +0100

Hi,

You should use DataView with RowFilter set accordingly.
Another approach is to use DataTable.Select method which returns array of DataRows.
There is no real SQL support there.

```
--
Miha Markic [MVP C#] - RightHand .NET consulting & software development
miha at rthand com
www.rthand.com
"2" <2@2.2> wrote in message news:eBBISrPAEHA.2480@TK2MSFTNGP11.phx.gbl...
> Hello,
>
> I get how to populate a dataset by querying a database server... but once > I've populated my dataset, say with several related tables, how can I then > select records from the dataset copy of data using SQL statements instead > of
> the database server itself?
>
> In some cases I'd say this is preferable to hitting the database server > everytime a subset of data needs to be retrieved. Only suitable for small > amounts of static data of course.
>
> As an example if I have a populated table of employee data in a dataset > and
> I want to populate a temp table with only those records where employee age
>
> 60..... am I limited to filters or can I use SQL statements (which would > then mean no extra code if I decided to point back at the database server > instead of the dataset itself)....?
>
> Hope this makes sense to you guys... cheers
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
```