

Re: newbie form question

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.framework.windowsforms/2004-09/0942.html>

From: Mikhail Fedosov (noemail_at_mail.ru)

Date: 09/20/04

Date: Mon, 20 Sep 2004 23:53:08 +0400

Did you set the Anchor property of Panel to (AnchorStyles.Top | AnchorStyles.Bottom | AnchorStyles.Left | AnchorStyles.Right) ?

I suppose if you set this property correctly you'll get rid of your problem. In this case Panel will follow the parent (user control) size.

On Mon, 20 Sep 2004 11:20:18 -0700, <Stephanie_Stowe@IDX.COM> wrote:

> I have a form with a treeview on it. This form also has a user control.
> This user control has a panel with controls in it (a couple of textboxes > and a ComponentOne TrueDB Grid). It is lovely. Except that when I resize > the form, the panel does not present scrollbars. I have the panel's > autoscroll property set to true. I went into the user control in the > designer. If I resize the panel itself, the scrollbars automatically > appear. And that is lovely. If I resize the control itself, the > scrollbars > do not appear. This makes sense to me. The panel does not know it's > container was resized. How do I tell it?
>
> Thanks
>
> Stephanie