

Re: development environment architecture for ASP.NET development team

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.general/2004-09/2883.html>

From: Ken Dopierala Jr. (kdopierala2_at_wi.rr.com)

Date: 09/27/04

Date: Mon, 27 Sep 2004 08:25:15 -0500

Hi,

This will link you to a presentation, almost 2 hours long, that will show you how to set everything up in a few different ways:

<http://support.microsoft.com/default.aspx?scid=kb:en-us:328845>

Good luck! Ken.

--

Ken Dopierala Jr.

For great ASP.Net web hosting try:

<http://www.webhost4life.com/default.asp?refid=Spinlight>

"Akhlag Khan" <auzkhan@newsgroup.nospam> wrote in message news:O6SZA5GpEHA.592@TK2MSFTNGP11.phx.gbl...

> hi,

> we have been working on web based applications built in ASP for quite > sometime now, but now we are moving to ASP.net. we have decided to use > ASP.NET for developing new modules in our current projects (built in ASP).
> So, the applications will be composed of both ASP and ASP.NET pages > simultaneously. Since, ASP is a scripting language, it was easier for us to > put all the source code on a single web server, add the web to visual > soursafe using FP extentions in IIS, connect to the web applications from > development workstations using visual interdev and start checking files > in/out without any problem. the developers would test the effects of their > changes right on the web server by hitting refresh or F5. Everything takes > place on the web server, except code modification.

>

> now, since we are moving from a scripting language to a "compiled"
language

> (ASP.NET), that means the application would need to be "built" on > development workstations before being deployed on server (check in), since
i > cannot expect my developers to build the application on server after every > single change they make on their own machine, coz they will keep switching > between machines forever. Moreover, i want the developers to be able to > "debug" their appliactions righth on other workstations (i found out that > debugging is nearly impossible if application is placed on server, just like > it was in ASP 3.0).

>

> My question is:

microsoft.public.dotnet.general: Re: development environment architecture for ASP.NET development team

>
> 1. What are the standard/recommended architectures for setting up > development environments for ASP.NET applications ?
> 2. Which one should i use if i want to use a).visual sourcesafe for > version > management. b) debugging capability for all developers on their own
> machines
> rather than server, c) easier maintenance/no or least code synchronization > hassle.
>
> desparately waiting for response ...
>
> thanks,
>
> akhlaq khan.
>
>