

RE: Files loading

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.languages.csharp/2004-11/0563.html>

From: Jeff Ciesielski (JeffCiesielski_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 11/02/04

Date: Tue, 2 Nov 2004 13:20:09 -0800

I would put all of the files into a folder called "files"(or whatever suits you), and place that folder in the same directory as your application. To load them, you wouldn't have to specify a drive letter, rather just the directory name. So if your program were "D:\myapp.exe" you could load the files by using ("@"files\filename")

"Xarky" wrote:

> Hi,
> I have an application that makes up of files(reading data). Files > are currently located on drive C. Now I am going to write the program > and the files being used to a CD. The program is going to be executed > on different computers and so the CD-Rom drive letter is not going to > be the same on all computers.
>
> When I load a file from harddisk I do as follows
> (@"c:\fileName")
>
> Can someone help me solve my problem.
>
>
> Thanks in Advance
>