

Re: vs for .Net SUCKS Big Time

---

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.languages.vb/2006-06/msg01919.html>

---

- From: "Bob" <bdufour@xxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Sun, 18 Jun 2006 21:30:13 -0400
-

Thanks I downloaded and installed it, it looks promising, if I can get this project out of the door I'll definitely start testing it and familiarizing myself with it.

Bob

"Michel Posseth [MCP]" <MSDN@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message <news:evCfCnskGHA.3924@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

Hi Bob ,

Been there ,,, , :-(

This is the result of the new autogenerated code approach , of VS

advantage : anyone who can drag and drop ( and do it right the first time ) can now make a simple program

my personal opinion is that this is making projects unnecessary big ( memory hungry and slow )

We are getting more and more in the role of a "Designer" instead of a coder

by the way there are alternatives ( some of them are even free like #develop ) however they have a somewhat bigger learning curve as you really need to code :-)

regards

Michel Posseth [MCP]

Re: vs for .Net SUCKS Big Time

"Bob" <bdufour@xxxxxxxxxx> schreef in bericht
news:ef\$fpKikGHA.2200@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

That's several times that it happened to me and I'm REALLY getting pissed off!. I try to add a control or do something in code and all of a sudden you get this.

Now you can't go back to your form designer to undo what you just did, There's nothing to do but spend useless hours in trying to clean up the autogenerated code.

If they're pretending to automate the tasks for us, let them do it right so that even idiots like me can't get in a situation from which there is no exit! When I manage to make a program, that's something that even a moron like me makes sure of. That his end users don't get in an impossible position! I can't figure out why the hell we take this sh.... I wish there were some serious competition to them so they'd have to get it right or pay the price. Now they're just laughing at us all the way to the bank! I'm a moron for putting up with it.

Regards to all of you like me :-)

Bob