Please don't apologize. It's hard to let something go that's just so darned wrong. BTW, I think Veritywhatever is either Aaronkempf of MP "in disguise". (All together now, "Oooooooooohh.")

To all that take advantage of this newsgroup, I extend my most abject apologies for allowing this to go this far. Stephany, thanks for the heads up on the makecab stuff, any others that have presented me with information and pointers in the correct direction, I also extend my thanks to you for that.

Miss, or Ms., Verity,

So you think I'm immature? My apologies, but Master Programmer, and Aaron Kempf as well, have been getting posts from more folk than myself. Some very good and well thought out posts as well. If I am immature to respond to a person who is using profanity and degrading me as a human being, then so be it. If you wish to just stick your head in the sand and hope that he will just 'go away', then you are the immature one. He was here long before I started posting here and he'll most likely be here long after I'm gone, from the sound of things. I have done the 'right' mature thing and blocked any messages from him from my newsreader. I do thank you for your response to me, but you come across as a heavy-handed 'do what I say, not what I do' type. If I am off-base on this, then I do submit my most abject apologies. But before you start calling folks pathetic, think of what the reaction will be to how YOU are perceived from your post.

Re: Which do you prefer?

You are just as immature and pathetic as Master Programmer. The only reason he is still here is because he keeps getting a response from you – and you always reply. I think you should both grow up.

S Verity

So you admit that you cannot respond to a simple comment with anything less than complete and utter filth. A programmer of many years, such as you claim to be, is an educated individual who would not NEED to use such filth to get his point across. The only time I have seen the use of such language is from uneducated, young trolls on the Internet who think that the bastion of separation that they are provided by the Internet allows them to speak any way they wish without consequence. Thank you for bearing out my supposition so clearly.

And I have not stated that commenting "every single line of code" is necessary. YOU tried to put those words into my mouth. Quite unsanitary, to say the least. :) I simply stated that commenting code is a good business practice.

Re: Which do you prefer?

I didnt call you a cake-hole you idiot, I told you to shut your cake-hole (your fucking mouth). When you have aquired a lot of experience (like me) then –
AND ONLY THEN – will you be permitted
to add your opinion.

It is common knowledge that bad programmers leave comments (maybe not so common around here – LOL). If you want to add a load of comments saying what every single line of your code does thats up to you.
However if you were a real expert you wouldnt need to.

Master Programmer, long ago I learned never to consider myself an 'expert'.
The more I learn, the more I realize I don't know. I live with the knowledge that I am never going to 'know it all'. And yet, I am good with that. If you need the security blanket of the Internet to pound your chest and tell the world that you are better than anyone else, just remember... an
'ex' is a
has been... and a 'spert' is a drip under pressure!
