

Re: IIS

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/DotNet/microsoft.public.dotnet.languages.vb/2007-09/msg00114.html>

- From: rowe_newsgroups <rowe_email@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 04 Sep 2007 05:57:35 -0700
-

On Sep 4, 7:32 am, "Mr. Arnold" <MR.Arn...@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

"rowe_newsgroups" <rowe_em...@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message

<snipped>

I am doing what I can to handle this in a professional manner – please drop the name calling and simply answer my above question about what you meant by your previous statements. If I misunderstood your intents I will apologize, and if you misunderstood my intents the professional thing for you to do would be to apologize.

You had no business coming into my face to begin with, period. You needed to post to the OP, and mind your own business like I was mining my own business. But you couldn't do that could you? You had to lip service me on something that I absolutely could care less about it.

I don't have to explain anything to you, master. I am not here to hold your hand , satisfy you or cater to your needs. That's the job of your family, and I doubt that they even do that.

I thought I made it kind of clear in my posts that I didn't want to be bothered with you, but you choose to ignore it.

The only thing you can do at this point and in the future is just stay out of my face, because I'll put it to you bluntly again, you* don't mean anything to *me. I could care less about what you're talking about.

I am here for the OP that needs help, if I can help the OP. I am not here for you.

I can't make it any plainer to you than that.

Re: IIS

Sigh, I can see you are not a professional and continuing this conversation will be as futile as continuing one with Aaron Kempf. I hope the readers of this post at least see my attempts to resolve a situation and your complete disregard for all professional conduct.

Now to let this thread die...

Thanks,

Seth Rowe

.