

Re: overcoming zero values in line graph

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Excel/microsoft.public.excel.charting/2005-03/0172.html>

From: Tushar Mehta (tmUnderscore200310_at_tushar-mehta.SeeOhEm)

Date: 03/08/05

Date: Mon, 7 Mar 2005 22:43:21 -0500

There is no reason why you cannot have a 2nd data set that has the N/A values. Plot this second set and use the first for whatever you are using it for.

--

Regards,

Tushar Mehta

www.tushar-mehta.com

Excel, PowerPoint, and VBA add-ins, tutorials

Custom MS Office productivity solutions

In article <FABDAB90-F576-4317-89B2-AB6F2BD37DC9@microsoft.com>, marikal981@discussions.microsoft.com says...

> I have a 12-month line graph where some of the earliest and most recent data > is still zero.

>

> Is there a way to have Excel not plot zero values - to avoid the big rises > and drop offs they cause - and, rather, just have the graph start and end > wherever there is positive data?

>

> (NOTE: for multiple reasons, I can't erase the formulae in the cells > yielding the zero values, or have them display the N/A message....)

>

> Thanks!!!

>

> Marika :)

>

>