

Re: Disable NetBIOS and NTLM on Windows 2003 Domain Controllers and Exchange 2003?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Exchange/microsoft.public.exchange.admin/2004-10/0576.html>

From: Andy David – Exchange MVP (adavid_at_pleasekeepinngcheesebucket.com)

Date: 10/04/04

Date: Mon, 04 Oct 2004 19:57:36 -0400

You may want to look at this:

<http://support.microsoft.com/default.aspx?scid=837391>

On Mon, 4 Oct 2004 08:25:31 -0600, "Research Services"

<key@lamar.n0-sp@m.colostate.edu.NO> wrote:

>*Is it possible to safely DISABLE NetBIOS and/or NTLMv1/LM on all Windows
>2000 and Windows 2003 Domain Controllers and/or Exchange 2003 servers
>(within our own child domain) without affecting Windows networking >communications adversely?
>We are a child domain in a single forest, we are NOT Enterprise >Administrators. Our DCs and Exchange are currently configured to refuse and >not send LM.
>All clients are Windows XP with NetBIOS already disabled and only talk >NTLMv2, there are no down-level clients (i.e., Win9x, NT4, Mac) in our child >domain.
>We are not sure if this will affect AD replication, especially between other >child domains in the forest not controlled by us – OR if Exchange 2003 >relies on NetBIOS and/or less than NTLMv2 to function correctly.
>
>Thanks for any input or help.
>
>*