

Re: Exchange 2003 and Clustering

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Exchange/microsoft.public.exchange.admin/2005-04/msg03885.html>

- From: Kirill Palagin <kpalagin@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 28 Apr 2005 16:33:05 +0400
-

Do you really require availability better than 99.99%? Do you have necessary expertise (or money to buy one)? E2003 is pretty solid piece of software, with proper maintenance (and clusters do require that too) it can provide decent availability in non-clustered setup.

bjorgenson@xxxxxxxxxxx wrote:

- > I am wondering how you would invoke installing the Exchange system
 - > files in a clustering scenario? I plan on having a 2-node cluster with
 - > a fiber channel SAN. I want to create 3 volumes on the SAN for
 - > logs/indexing, db's, and archiving. I will also load the OS on each
 - > node but i am not sure if the Exchange system files should be installed
 - > on the nodes or on the SAN?
 - >
 - > Thanks,
 - > Brian
- .
-

- Follow-Ups:
 - ◆ Re: Exchange 2003 and Clustering
 - ◇ From: jjd228
- References:
 - ◆ Exchange 2003 and Clustering
 - ◇ From: bjorgenson
- Prev by Date: RPC don't authorize
- Next by Date: Re: Moving Exchange Mailbox Store Hanging
- Previous by thread: RE: Exchange 2003 and Clustering
- Next by thread: Re: Exchange 2003 and Clustering
- Index(es):
 - ◆ Date
 - ◆ Thread