

Re: Can someone recommend a product?

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Exchange/microsoft.public.exchange.admin/2006-09/msg02135.html>

- From: "Matthew Kitchin \ (Usenet/Lists\)" <mkitchin.public@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 18 Sep 2006 13:32:47 -0500
-

"Larry Coon" <lcospam@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
<news:450EE3A3.4B2C@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

Matthew Kitchin (Usenet/Lists) wrote:

Also note that this problem already exists whenever both the sender and receiver are protected by these systems, so I'm sure it's a problem that the vendors have already thought of and dealt with.

My point exactly. The problem does already exist. If 2 users are using a Challenge/Response system, and neither one is on the others accepted list, they will never be able to send each other mail. I'm yet to see a vendor that has done anything about this. What could you do? If you find a way to sneak something through, spammers will use the same. I think this is a flawed and selfish concept.