I have built an Exchange Server 2003 environment with 2 back end servers and one front end server. One back end server is for mailbox storage, while the other is for public folder storage.

We are currently migrating from Exchange 5.5. I have replicated about half of the public folders (or about 64 Gb) to the new server. Although there are no mailboxes on this server, the mailbox store has grown to about 30 Gb. There is only one storage group on this server.

What is causing this? Is it OK to remove the mailbox store from this server?
