

microsoft.public.exchange.setup: Re: split one organization/site into 2

Re: split one organization/site into 2

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Exchange/microsoft.public.exchange.setup/2004-10/1518.html>

From: Mark Arnold [MVP] (mark_at_mvps.org)

Date: 10/27/04

Date: Wed, 27 Oct 2004 20:30:37 +0100

On 27 Oct 2004 08:21:44 -0700, rmilbrand@gfnet.com (RAM) wrote:

>We are running Exchange Server 2003 on Win2K3. Front-end server to >clustered back-end. We host email for our own employees, but also for >some clients outside of our system.

>

>We would like to split things up so that we have a separate >environment for the clients' mailboxes. Do we set up a separate >organization, or just a separate site? (Idea here is, if our email is >down, can we keep the clients' email and running?) We tried installing >Exchange 2003 on another server, but it never asked about joining an >existing site or creating a new one - just automatically joined the >existing site.

>

>Suggestions for doing this? Thanks in advance.

>

>- RAM

You don't need another server for hosting. Take a look starting here:

http://www.msexchange.org/tutorials/Shared_Hosting_Exchange_2003_Part1.html