At this point, that machine is not behaving as expected. For what reason, I do not know. I also believe I will not be able to know. Since it is a front-end server however, I also believe it is not time efficient to further troubleshoot. It would be far faster, and in the end more reliable due to being at a known state, if you rebuilt the OS and applications on that machine vs. trying to edge it in piece by piece.

My $0.04 anyway.

Thanks. I just discovered another interesting finding. I just rebooted the server and all services are fine. How do I ensure that everything gets installed? I tried the OWA and it did not work.

Any idea?

Thanks. I did it installation again and watched the progress going.
The error pops up when the setup indicator shows 'configuring registry entries for Microsoft Exchange server -Level Objects' after all files are copied in Hmm.. That's odd. Any reason not to blow that instance out and reinstall as a 2003 FE server?

Thanks for your help. I am almost finished this upgrading and I got this error during the 80% completion. There is no error in the event log and the store is not mounted as the services stop during the upgrade.

Any idea?

A lot of times a FE server is put in an isolated network. I wonder if that's the case for you? Have you checked the event logs
