

Re: Client Waiting for Data From Exchange Server

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Exchange/microsoft.public.exchange2000.misc/2005-02/0050.html>

From: Bruce (spam_at_txfb-ins.org)

Date: 02/21/05

Date: Mon, 21 Feb 2005 15:24:32 -0600

One item I have noticed is that on Wireless Networks it happens alot. I can be working on my laptop on a regular Ethernet and do not get the message at the same time my wireless laptop will be getting it.

Another place to look is you information Store. Do you need to run ISINTEG or ESEUTIL on it to get it back into a good clean condition? One time I had to do a ISINTEG to stop that message from happening.

bruce.dollens@txfb-ins.org

"PC" <paulm dot c @ iol dot ie> wrote in message news:%23x4rLX5AFHA.2608@TK2MSFTNGP10.phx.gbl...

> This could be for many reasons. A couple to look at first would be > in the Exchange server (Up to 1G or more depending on the size of your site)
1.Memory

> 2. Network overload – check to see if there is are excessive broadcasts or > erroneous traffic (Yo could use a packet sniffer to examine network traffic)

>

> Regards

>

> ..pc

>

> "Jon" <lanmanjs@hotmail.com> wrote in message

> news:OMvMYwk%23EHA.3700@tk2msftngp13.phx.gbl...

>> What do I need to look at when I and others in my company get a "waiting >> for data" message pop up periodically while they are attached to the >> Exchange Server using Outlook? I have looked through the SM, checked the >> resources of the server and tried the knowledgebase but I still don't see >> any reason for this. My settings all seem to be correct.

>>

>> Any replies would be greatly appreciated.

>>

microsoft.public.exchange2000.misc: Re: Client Waiting for Data From Exchange Server

> > Jon

> >

>

>