Maybe you log off by closing the publish window (?) or by closing down frontpage (or closing that particular web)...try this and see. Close down the web (don't exit Frontpage) then reopen the same web, click File > publish and see then if it prompts for password and username – I think it actually will....

I agree....there is no disconnect or log off....but then you don't have that with an FTP client either....you do have a disconnect or similar function but that is different because if you publish by FP http: you have to have a particular web open, the one you're working on, so if you close that web down, and open another then you obviously would log on with different details relevant to the other site/server/host/ISP. I doubt you use the same log on details for all the sites you do (if you indeed look after multiple sites).

Anyway.....with normal FTP (WS_FTP for example) you log on, but you can then disconnect and log on to a different FTP server.....
