Thanks for the help Kathleen! And I looked at that, but I ran a Google search for my problem and here is what actually fixed it for those that run into this problem...

The search came up with this..

enter information into your database create a simple results page to view the results of your database

If you get an error, you don't have a database connection at all. I did this and had an error. It listed 4 issues that could be causing the problem.

One of them was that the webpages that I was working on needed to be in an Application Folder. Since I was testing this site out, I had it in it's own little neat folder.

So I moved everything to the root, verified my permissions and guess what – IT WORKED!!! I almost cried.

Anyhow – good luck to everyone trying to accomplish this task!
