

Re: Complexe HTML in signature

---

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Mac/microsoft.public.mac.office.entourage/2008-07/msg01347.html>

---

- From: Jolly Roger <jollyroger@xxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Wed, 23 Jul 2008 13:56:25 -0500
-

In article <C4AC980D.2CDC%spam@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>, Sam's Spam <spam@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

Unfortunately this has digressed into a thread about Jolly Roger

....through no fault of my own...

I'm not the one who started that branch of this discussion. Someone else did. I'll leave it as an exercise for you to figure out to whom you should complain.

, and a philosophical debate about the merits of HTML email.

....again, through no fault of my own...

I asked two simple questions, and didn't ask for a debate. Any perceived debate was started by someone else in this thread – not me. Again, you'll have to figure out on your own where to lodge your complaints. I'm not accepting complaints.

So, Jolly Roger, for the record, we don't care about your day job, or how you would handle a boss telling you how to format mails, or what you would do about it.

Sorry, but you don't get to speak for every single person here. My advice: Speak for yourself – I always do. : )

And your record of long standing employment doesn't make me feel any differently about your attitude here.

Re: Complexe HTML in signature

Not that I care one little iota how anything I write makes you feel either way... If you're having emotional problems based on what you read, I suggest you stop reading it. ; )

We don't care to hear your philosophy on the demerits of HTML email communication.

I recommend you speak for yourself. It really works better that way.

We come here looking for answers to why such a basic and prevalent feature in all email clients is so hopelessly broken in Entourage.

Hopelessly is right – and I hope it stays that way. If HTML is broken in Entourage that many fewer people will be encouraged to send the nasty stuff my way. Great! : )

Aside from your own strong opinions about HTML email, some of us count on it for many things.

I have no problem with you doing so, as long as you don't send them to me. : )

So your derogatory comments such as "oh boo hoo, cry me a river" and other such pejorative crap aren't really being well received.

I give people the same respect they give me.

The above so-called derogatory remark was issued in response to a derogatory remark by the person to which I responded.

BTW: This happens to be Usenet, where we are all free to voice our opinions and feelings – thank goodness. If you don't like that, too fuckin' bad – throw a tantrum in a corner about it, if it makes you feel better.

For the record, I find you and your comments offensive.

Too bad, so sad. Deal with it. : )

Re: Complexe HTML in signature

Re: Complex HTML in signature

We're here for answers, and sometimes to see if others are running into the same problems, but we're certainly not here for pedantic lectures from the likes of you.

I'll hope I'm not the only one here aware of the fact that while you complain that the discussion has diverged into a characterization of me, you simultaneously characterize me yourself. ; ) Sorry – two-faced arguing has no place here. You'll have to pick one – either accept that yourself and others will degrade the discussion into personal attacks, or don't perpetuate it. The ball is in your court.

Meanwhile, since you've already degraded this post, I'll retort: I've got news for you – if it weren't for "the likes of me" you wouldn't have a lot of the luxuries you take for granted. The "likes of me" help create the hardware that supports the networks and computers you use to post these messages. Without the "likes of me", those chips wouldn't exist. I know, I know, you'd love it if "the likes of me" didn't exist at all – unfortunately you depend on "the likes of me" every day of your life. Quite the conundrum, isn't it? : )

Not that this has anything at all to do with the discussion of HTML signatures...

—

Send responses to the relevant news group rather than to me, as E-mail sent to this address may be devoured by my very hungry SPAM filter. Due to Google's refusal to prevent spammers from posting messages through their servers, I often ignore posts from Google Groups. Use a real news client if you want me to see your posts.

JR

.