It's OK and I understand that almost. But from my perspective of view such a bug may not happend in a released version of a popupar product like MS Office for mac. There must have been any test before the release, right? I think that the community feels a little bit angry, because the main thing using entourage is to manage appointments within a huge of users in an exchange stucture. And sorry but this is definitely not possible with this release.

I understand your frustrations, but I'm a user just like you. I'm sure Microsoft knows this is a huge mistake, but if you ever want to let MSFT know your feelings, you need to send feedback directly to them.

When working in Office, you can use the ³Send Feedback² option under the Help menu in all of the Office applications.

Thank you for the hint with the backup. Be sure that I have one. But for me this could not be the solution. Therefore my question. How long will it take to fix this. Is it worth to do that workaround. I mean the restore of the 12.1.2 Version. As you surly know, this takes longer than a few minutes.

Rolling back using the remove and reinstall then update is not easy. Reverting to a backup copy is painless and quick.

And last but not least, we all have to do our business and not really time to act with workaround, due to the reason that a released update will only partially work.

This are just my two cents to that issue! And I'll hope that the fix will arrive soon.

We all do.
