I have the same problem. I don't understand how MS could make such an obvious mistake and, six months after its release, not have a fix for it yet. It makes the presenter, which is usually somebody in a business presenting internally or to people outside of their company, look sloppy.

I also don't understand why, with all of the "MVPs" crawling all over this site, there isn't an answer for this yet.

We're not MS employees. It's perhaps a bit easier for us to bring problems to Microsoft's attention, but we have about as much ability to get problems fixed as you do.

Less if we take "you" in the aggregate. Please ... everyone ...if you haven't already done so, use the item on the Help menu to contact MS and describe the problem. That's a vote for a fix.
