This question may sound elementary, but I just wanted to check. Is there a way to make a style that occupies the same vertical space of the header? That is, can you create a style that will appear "higher" than the bottom of the header?

This reply may sound perverse. No, {1} but you can have material in the header lower than the body of the page.

It has nothing to do with styles. You are off on the wrong track there.

You can place a graphic in the header that occupies some or all of the page. It is a common way of placing a watermark all over each page of your document.

I have probably misunderstood your question. If so, post back with a long rambling description of what you are trying to do and why.

Note 1. I don't think you can anchor a graphic in the body of a page that extends upward. Somebody wiser with an even more twisted mind than mine might be along shortly.
