

Re: Minimizing INDIVIDUAL MSDOS based active win. w/ shortcut keys

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/Office/microsoft.public.office.misc/2006-10/msg00391.html>

- From: Jen Sel <JenSel@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 29 Sep 2006 01:04:01 -0700
-

Dear Mr. Smith:

I usually do ignore rude people; but sometimes, I can't stand it and pop-off. I made it clear in my question that I could not find the right discussion group. I asked my question, not really expecting an answer. I asked it in hopes that someone had experienced the same problem and knew how to resolve it. Snide remarks are no help. In fact, they cause more frustration. Why do that to someone?

I know a few things, here and there about various things :) and if someone, say--posted a question on a physical bulletin board, for example. Hypothetically I'm walking by, minding my business&and see this question&and (miracle ;) knew the answer; I would respond. If I did not know the answer, how nice would it be if I made unnecessary and mean comments on it?

My only point in responding to the senseless remarks that were made in response to my question was to make the world a better place. I'm sure that you do not like it when others are rude to you, no one does. Finally, I suspend my indignation every day I attend college (yes, I have THOSE instructors). I just didn't feel like ignoring it that night.

Anyway,
Sincerely,
JenSel

P.S. I tried to sending this message privately to your email address, but it was returned undeliverable

"Gary Smith" wrote:

You should try to be less sensitive and read more closely the help that's been provided. Minimizing windows is a operating system function that has nothing to do with Office. In order to get the best answer to your question, you need to post it in a group devoted to your version of Windows. There are dozens of Windows XP groups. One of them will be a much better fit.

Re: Minimizing INDIVIDUAL MSDOS based active win. w/ shortcut keys

Jen Sel <JenSel@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

If you had actually read my question: I could not have explained it more specifically that I need to MINIMIZE active windows with a shortcut keystroke. I have spent approximately 4 hours on this and thought someone here might be helpful; but instead I rudeness. Hummm, maybe all the things that people say about computer geeks are true.

"JoAnn Paules [MVP]" wrote:

You mean all of that was asking how to easily switch from one minimized application to another??

--

JoAnn Paules
MVP Microsoft [Publisher]

"Bob I" <birelan@xxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:OexCIpI3GHA.1796@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Alt-Tab

Jen Sel wrote:

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen:
How does one go about "setting-a-setting" to minimize MSDOS Based applications INDIVIDUALLY by using one assigned shortcut keystroke group? (I know how to minimize ALL applications at once.) The Best Case Scenario would be doing so in Win XP Professional (a Windows XP Discussion Group was not listed as an option to post to) without having to go into EACH applications' .exe/ tool setting/or whatever. I'm sure it can be done;

Re: Minimizing INDIVIDUAL MSDOS based active win. w/ shortcut keys

but, I have wasted SO much time trying to find an answer from MicroSoft,
Dell, Tutorials, Help
Indexes, etc.!
Frustrated Jennifer Please Help, Thanks...

--
Gary L. Smith
Columbus, Ohio