If you have two anti virus applications installed, that will cause no end of problems.

I note you state that this Laptop is only a week old, if that is the case you might be better off copying any data to external media, then using the restore option to reset your laptop to factory defaults.

Then start afresh, this time first ascertaining what software is installed on your Laptop before you leap in and start installing applications.

I had planned on taking the anti virus out because I have one I use all the time and I don't need two. Anyway before I uninstalled it I set the options not to scan email and still got the error, so that's that. Do you think I should do a system restore and get rid of the register fixer I bought trying to end this error? I've heard too many bad things about register cleaners. My poor laptop is only a week old and I'm doing all these things trying to get rid of one annoying window. I guess I need to live with it.

I did not mean that you should uninstall it and put something else in it's place Judy. I meant to uninstall it and then re-install it without the email scanning option

Your profile is how you set up your personal info for your Outlook.

hello Peter...I already uninstalled my Anti Virus and installed my own.
hmmm...new profile...you mean a new email address?

If it is Outlook asking all the time then uninstall your Anti Virus
and re-install without the email integration(scanning of emails)
Also set up a new profile in Outlook
