If you are willing to invest about $50, you can buy the IntelliMover program, and it will move settings and preferences, as well as anything else (except programs) you might want to move. It will also furnish the necessary cables as part of the price. I got my IntelliMover from Dell, but you can probably get it cheaper on EBay.

>My old laptop's motherboard crashed so I've gotten a new one. I have the old laptop's hard drive in a USB case and can access everything on it. I'm kind of a power user and am really dreading the idea of re-customizing all the office toolbars and settings.
