I have upgraded my operating system from Windows 98 to Windows 2000 Professional. Office XP was already installed on the PC and remained there during the OS upgrade. Now, Office applications will run in the Administrator account, but whenever another domain user attempts to open an Office application, it wants to install from the CD. I insert the CD; and the first time it asks me who I want to run this program as. I choose administrator and supply the administrator password, but the install fails; and a window pops up telling me that I need to be an administrator to install Office. Any ideas?
