In Outlook 2003, I have checked the box "Use Microsoft Word 2003 to edit email messages". When I'm composing or editing an email message, the visible icons at the top of that window are much fewer in number compared to simply creating a new Word document.

Shouldn't the icons visible in each of the windows be identical? I have tried to add/subtract icons from the Email editor window, so that I can have access to visible icons that are similar to, or identical to the actual Microsoft Word 2003 window, but that "customize" process won't allow me to make additions or deletions to the visible icons.

Any solutions?
