I receive emails with a .log attachment, which, of course, is just a text file. Is there a way to inform Outlook 2007 to use the text document previewer for this file type? The file type settings in Folder Options indicates that this file extension is text, but it does not have an application associated with it. I would prefer not to have to save this file and view it from another application (I just need to glance at it). Thanks!
