If you feel that way, I am sorry.

The fact is that I have 2GB of storage and yes, I also have the connector, but I saw no great advantage and even complicating and slowing the mail delivery. Thus I deleted it. This was the product of a very helpful support call, about 6 months ago, for other problem. But I was not using 2007 yet. Having also a premium msn.com address, I see little advantage on a premium hotmail and they did agree with me at that time. Sorry I bother you.

I see nothing here that would qualify you for ongoing support from hotmail unless you upgraded to a paid premium account and are using the connector they provide. You need to take this issue up with them. It is not an Outlook issue.

Good point.

My hotmail account is a legacy one, which I have since the early times of HM in the 1990s. I am also a MSN subscriber. Because of that and since the early days of a fee for hotmail, I was not only exempted of charges, but was given full storage capacity. And yes, it has been always fully supported by Outlook (of any flavor) for the same reason, even under W95. It is configure as an HTTP and to the following server:
HOTMAIL SERVER: <http://services.msn.com/svcs/hotmail/httpmail.asp>
Out of 11 computers of different OS and Outlook flavors, only the one with 2007 exhibit the behavior, irrespective of the ISP, as I use a different one when I am in Europe.

Thanks for your interest,
Cheers

We are not ignorant, as you suggested. My point was that to troubleshoot
this further we must know why your hotmail account should be supported by Outlook (e.g., is it a paid premium account?) and if so how you
configured it for Outlook 2007.

Thanks for the honest comment. The only observation I have is that it does not occur with O2003, OXP or O2K,
which I also use in others
computers. Why with O2007?
Cheers.

You are assuming this is an Outlook problem. You have provided no evidence to that effect. You are, after all, using Hotmail.
