Do you really have no life except as a newsgroup policeman? And who appointed you anyway?

Only required because above poster used QUOTED-PRINTABLE format.

When posting to newsgroups, do NOT use quoted-printable format.

* Not all NNTP clients handle quoted-printable format.

- Some users still use console-mode (non-GUI) NNTP clients.

- The long lines may not wrap properly.

- Scrolling is needed if the long line does not get wrapped.

- The long line may get truncated at the window's width.

- Quoted-printable format uses special character sequences for logical formatting. View the raw source of your post. Text-only clients may show that encoding when viewing your post.

* Quoting levels get mangled, especially for multiple replies.

* In replies, there is no clear delineation of content.

- Cannot tell what content is from the original poster and what is from the respondent.

- Makes impossible to determine who said what when a reply inserts comments inline with the quoted content.

And as a professed MVP even you should know Usenet netiquette. You keep being rude, and I'll keep needling ya.
