Only required because above poster used QUOTED-PRINTABLE format.
When posting to newsgroups, do NOT use quoted-printable format.

- * Not all NNTP clients handle quoted-printable format.
- Some users still use console-mode (non-GUI) NNTP clients.
- The long lines may not wrap properly.
- Scrolling is needed if the long lines do not get wrapped.
- The long line may get truncated at the window's width.
- Quoted-printable format uses special character sequences for logical formatting. View the raw source of your post. Text-only clients may show that encoding when viewing your post.
- * Quoting levels get mangled, especially for multiple replies.
- * In replies, there is no clear delineation of content.
- Cannot tell what content is from the original poster and what is from the respondent.
- Makes impossible to determine who said what when a reply inserts comments inline with the quoted content.

Also, do not use HTML format. Post using plain-text format.

This is Usenet, not e-mail!

"Outlook rejects it". Oh, and you expected someone ELSE to know just what that means? Prove Outlook Express rejected the e-mail by showing the error message here. No one here is going to know what was the error message unless you say what it is.
