

Re: Stumped: D-Link Network and PPC w/SanDisk WiFi Card

Source:

<http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/PocketPC/microsoft.public.pocketpc.wireless/2004-04/0346.html>

From: Mauricio Freitas (dr.emailposter_at_nowhere.invalid)

Date: 04/27/04

Date: Tue, 27 Apr 2004 21:53:55 +1200

I'm sorry to hear you're having this kind of problems. Perhaps something related to WEP?

Anyway, if not that, I have to say I had a bad experience with Sandisk wi-fi cards. I ended up returning it and buying a h4150 to replace my h3970. Sad, I know.

--

Mauricio Freitas, Microsoft MVP Mobile Devices

Handhelds, mobile: <http://www.geekzone.co.nz>

Bluetooth guides: <http://www.geekzone.co.nz/content.asp?contentid=449>

Performance Centre (Pocket PC reviews):

<http://www.geekzone.co.nz/content.asp?ContentId=2028>

Handango discount: http://www.geekzone.co.nz/handango_code.asp

"Lex" <skfinn@wisc.edu> wrote in message

news:4bcf01c42cle$ce7fa790$a101280a@phx.gbl...

> I have a home wireless home network that is all all D-Link > products. D-Link 614+ router, and three PCs all with D-> Link adapters. Bought a ViewSonic Pocket PC in January.
> Bought a SanDisk SDIO card a month ago. I am embarrassed > to admit this but after probably a hundred hours of trying > (writing to OEM support), looking at internet articles, > calling support or help desks, I (and other "experts") > cannot get my PC linked to my network. The PPC recognizes > the card, but won't link to the "hot spot." I don't know > alot about this stuff but I did get my home network > working. Don't know much about all the acronyms and stuff > like that, because so far I haven't needed to. The D-Link > stuff linked up quite nicely without need for geek > knowledge on my part. I have a PhD, but I am not smart > enough to figure this out and this problem has stumped me > to the point of exhaustion and frustration. Can any kind > person here help me or point me to a site or resource that > can help?
>