

Re: Audible notifications gone on Dell Axim X59v running WM 2003 SE with Spb Pocket Plus v4

Re: Audible notifications gone on Dell Axim X59v running WM 2003 SE with Spb Pocket Plus v4

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/PocketPC/microsoft.public.pocketpc/2008-04/msg00254.html>

- From: normc <normc@xxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 21 Apr 2008 11:51:27 GMT
-

That did it!!!! I stuck my phone plug in half-way and wiggled it around a little. Voila, it was clicking before I had the plug out.

I usually have to hear something new at least 3 times. This time it only took 2 times <g>.

Thanks to all

Todd Allcock wrote:

"normc" <norm-c@xxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:xxOj.1375\$26.1298@xx

Thanks a mint. With your suggestions and the new thoughts your suggestions generated locally, I've pretty much determined that it is a speaker wire. I AM an engineer <g>, but an old one (73).

Everything audio (alarms, taps, music, etc.) can be heard thru the earphones, but not thru the speaker. I'm sure that the guy who puts my computers together can fix it.

Sorry- I misunderstood- whne you said the device could still play music, I assumed you meant the music played over the speaker.

If ALL audio works through the headphones and NO audio works through the speaker, it could be a broken wire to the speaker, but more likely it's Sven's first diagnosis- a "stuck" headphone jack. The switch to choose between headphones and speaker is a little strip of metal that is "forced" into headphone mode by the physical pressure of the inserted headphone plug. Sometimes that little strip loses it's springiness and stays in the headphone position even when the plug is removed. Occasionally repeatedly plugging/unplugging the headphones will unstick it, sometimes playing "lock pick" with a small jeweler's screwdriver or paperclip can unstick it, but generally it's time for a new jack- something your computer guy can probably handle. (The kind of stuff I could've probably handled two decades ago when I had steadier hands and better eyes! ;-)

Re: Audible notifications gone on Dell Axim X59v running WM 2003 SE with Spb Pocket Plus v4

Good luck!

You mentioned Spb Pocket Plus. I doubt I will ever buy another version. Their last update was terrible. And I DID use the repeating alarms, but no more.

Thanks again.

Norm