It is written for Pub 2007, but if you are using IE7 instead of IE6, then the directions for using Vista would apply to Pub 2003. FTP uploading has changed with the introduction of IE7. Pay particular attention to the instructions for FTP uploading in Vista. If you are not using a form on your page then you can use FTP uploading.

Though this is a different ISP, it offers good directions. Reference:
GoDaddy: Using Windows Vista to Upload Your Site:

Describes what an FTP client is and how to use Windows Vista Network Places to upload your Web site to your host.

As you are using FTP uploading then consider downloading and installing the free FTP client FileZilla:

It is likely to be easier for you. Also peruse this page:

I got website up and running but now cannot load updates to web host they say no problems with there end. I am using publisher 2007 with Vista. web host is unix (aplus) using ftp site when i hit publish to web box appears i select the ftp. and username and passord box comes up i fill in and hit ok then

Re: updating web page with publisher 2007 hit

the html folder. I hit save and asks if i want to replace existing index.
hit yes and it says will publish filtered files I hit ok and then it starts
working and asks for password again i put it in it continues to work (longer
then the first time) it stops and ask for password again i put it in and it starts thinking again eventually the error box comes up and says could not publish check url or network connections. If I try to do it again theusername
and password box comes up after i hit the ftp location if i hit login it comes back with same box saying could not logon if i hit it again it freezes
I have to reboot computer to clear screen.
