

Re: Schema and "first" System Management Container

Source: <http://www.tech-archive.net/Archive/SMS/microsoft.public.sms.setup/2004-09/0526.html>

From: Kim Oppalfens (kim_at_computacenter.nospam)

Date: 09/29/04

Date: Wed, 29 Sep 2004 17:11:11 +0200

Although I haven't verified this, this doesn't really seem to make sense. The system management container is created in the domain partition, so I couldn't see how it would influence other domains at all.

If it would be created in Configuration partition it might have an impact, but now it doesn't.

Kim Oppalfens

In article <Og6X9iOpEHA.3392@TK2MSFTNGP15.phx.gbl>, jasons@hotmail.com says...

> Hi, Our Active Directory have an "empty" root DC domain at the top level > with 6 child domains. Total of 30K users. Now that the schema will be > extended shortly for our SMS 2003 deployment.
> But I heard that since our root domain is an "empty" root with DC and no > other member server, and therefore will not have any System Management > Container created for SMS 2003. At a result, whichever child domain, after > schema extension, created their "first" System management container, will > have control right to other System Management container that will be created > later on at each different child domain.

>
> Is this really true? Is there any support MS article / info that I could > refer to?

>
> Any help appreciated.

>
> Jason

>
>
>

--

Check out the SMS Technical FAQ:

<http://www.microsoft.com/technet/prodtechnol/sms/sms2003/techfaq/default.aspx>