Why is the MSDN web interface allowing posting to this newsgroup if it is defunct?

I asked this same question on 12/9 in response to a post by Daneil Larson. I received no reply. It would be nice to get some clarificaton.

Hi,

I posted to this newsgroup using another account associated with my MSDN subscription just the other day (12/11/2006). The sad thing is I used the MSDN web interface to post to this supposed defunct newsgroup. Why is the MSDN web interface allowing posting to this newsgroup if it is defunct?

Larry,

NNTP users aren't ever going to see that page, so they have to use the list of newsgroups that the server provides them. And, if the server says it is there, people will come. Count on it! Besides, these are where all the real SPS 2003 action is.
