Any account that is in the local Administrators group on the SPS server has permissions to log on. In a default W2K3 installation the account name is Administrator with the password that was initially configured when you installed the OS. However, any account added to the group should have the same permissions. Some other things to check would be:

- Make sure that Anonymous Authentication is not enabled on the SharePoint Central Administration site
- Make sure the Identity account configured on the CentralAdminAppPool is in the local Administrators group (or Domain Admins group)

If none of these things work then my best advise would be to reinstall from scratch and read up on the requirements for the Configuration Database account that is set as part of the install process.
