I have an app that is written in VB6 and connects to a SQL 2000 database. I created a table for users that the app uses in order to authenticate the users at login of the app. I would prefer to connect the login to the actual users section of the database. Is this possible or must I have a users table. The goal is that the user can update their password and have it update the users section under security in the database. I hope this explanation is clear...
