Help please....just recently I have been having trouble opening Word 2003 in a VISTA operating system. I immediately get an error message that tells me Word has stopped working when it hasn't even opened. It then tells me a problem has stopped it from working but doesn't indicate what problem and tells me "a solution will be sent to me once one is found.

When I again try to open a document, it tells me it can't locate it. I then try to open WORD 1st (not the document 1st) and I get an error message: Word failed to start correctly last time. Starting word in safe mode will help you correct or isolate a start up problem in order to successfully start the program. Some functionality may be disabled in this mode.

I tried to detect and repair and it said it was successful but I still have the problem. Has anyone else experienced this and do you have any advice how to resolve this? Thanks in Advance!

If you can't get the issue reconciled, you might want to give OpenOffice.org a try – it will probably do what you need.

I'm sure he can get the problem solved. OpenOffice is a piece of crap, the GUI is about 10 years past, and OpenOffice is good for geeks and trolls like yourself who have nothing better to do than insult people here.

The OP has Word 2003, he doesn't want or need that OpenSores crap.

Go bother the people in the Ubuntu forum if you have such a hard-on for OpenOffice and Ubuntu.
