I'm running Vista 64 bit Ultimate and I don't have sufficient privileges to do the things I need on my system. For instance I can't edit applicationHost.config file. I'm a member of the administrators group but that is apparently not enough. How can I get the right authority?

Thanks,
Gary

You fix the problem by adding your user account to the file or folder that matches the Administrator Group rights. If you're logging onto the machine as garydean and the account is an admin/user account, then add user/garydean with full rights to match Administrators, because in some cases, Vista and UAC look at the combined rights of the two accounts, if that user account is missing or doesn't match the rights of Administrator's, then access denied or you don't have the privileges.
