I have just started using IE7 on a Vista Ultimate laptop. I have moved my own homepage from my XP IE6 laptop. This homepage consists of a bunch of icons with my favorite urls so that by clicking on one it brings up that website. When I try to do this on IE 7 it opens a brand new IE 7 window instead of a new tab on the current window. I want it to either open the website in a new tab or in the current IE7 window. I get a message that says websites in different security zone must open another copy of IE7. I would prefer to have a new tab open on the current IE7 window or just bring up the website on the current tab replacing my homepage. It seems to think my homepage is a different security zone. This homepage is from a folder in a documents folder that has gifs and an htm. How can I make IE 7 tabs behave the way I want? Or How can I tell IE 7 that my home page has urls that are internet sites and treat them as that.

Right now each icon I click opens a new window. I would be happy if they would just use the same window that my homepage opens. There are no controls in tools > options > general.> Tabbing settings that will change this behavior
