Well, I've looked into it a bit more.

It appears that the MAC OS is getting the UTC time and displaying it in their file browser.

On any windows machine, Windows 98/2000/xp/2003 are adjusting the file date / time to reflect for time zone and daylight savings time.

So for example, there's this one file that shows being modified @ 11:42 on the MACs and it's now showing 12:42 on all windows platforms.

So the MAC OS is seeming to show UTC time where the windows clients are adjusting the time. WIth quark 5, it appears to be using basic Windows API function calls to get the date time from the O/S. Since that time is different from what the file has stored (UTC), it's saying that the file has changed.
