Here's the scenario. We're using dreamweaver on Win 2K, which is accessing a password protected directory. we were advised by the hosting company that before we set it up in dreamweaver we should go to Start->Run, or in IE and enter the directory information:

\\10.140.129.59\Website\

The username and password login box then displays and we entered the information. We set it up all fine and it was working. Then this morning we were told the password has changed on that directory. I tried that URL in IE again but since it has stored the username and password it will not show that box again for me to change it. I just get an access denied error because the password is wrong. How do I tell the system the password has changed?

Thanks

Sam
