Thanks Richard. I think I finally see it. I was being careless.

Ah – no. That will keep a copy of the document on the print server after it's printed. Follow the "Windows NT 4.0" instructions exactly as they are shown in the KB article. It does work.

Thanks. I think I see it now. It's in "Keep printed documents", isn' it?

The details are in the KB article. You'll probably need to be logged in with an account with administrative permissions. I checked the article's instructions on both XP and 2K and have the correct settings available when logged in as Administrator.

Hi Richard,

I have both win 2000 sp4 and win xp, but I don't see the option to log print jobs. I've looked at the Advanced tab under printer properties. I'm probably not looking carefully enough. Would you please be able to provide the details to enabling print job logging?

Follow the Windows NT 4.0 instructions for either Windows 2000 or XP computers.

Dear all,

I have a
workgroup
with a
Windows
2000
computer
designated
for printing.
Is
there a way
to log print
jobs,
including
which user
printed,
how many
pages,
and when
the print job
was sent?

Thanks to all who reply.

Wallace
