I set the RDP-TCP properties so that when a client logs on, the client settings are overridden and a particular program automatically starts.

I was hoping however, that when the administrator logs on, these settings would not take effect and the Administrator would be able to go directly to the desktop of the server.

As I found out, this doesn't happen and the program automatically starts the same for the Administrator as it does for any other client logging on.

Is there a way I can not have these settings apply to the Administrator but to all other TS users?

We are using Windows 2000 server with SP4.

Thank you.
